Coaching and long-term success can be attributed to those leaders who build strong, collaborative and focused teams. Leaders who create a culture of open communication and development see themselves and their teams as “mutually accountable” for outcomes, provide feedback and support to achieve goals and increase retention rates. When a leader engages a team by defining the way in which it works together, team members hold a strong and shared vision of the future, feel comfortable in asking for, giving and receiving feedback, and are focused on improving themselves and others.
